Les dents

Original Publisher: Pratham Books
Author: Rohan Dahotre
Illustrator: Rohan Dahotre
Translator: Sak Untala

Des dents qui repoussent
sans cesse

Des dents qui s'aiguisent
toutes seules

Des dents très solides

Des dents en forme de crochets

Des dents qui ressemblent à une corne

Des dents disposées en dents de scie

Des dents orange

Des dents qui poussent
en permanence

Des dents qui filtrent

Des dents qui broient le corail

Des dents qui ressemblent
à celles des vampires

Des dents qui sont
des défenses

Quelques infos croustillantes à se mettre sous la dent...

Les crocodiles remplacent leurs dents en les faisant repousser toutes seules.

Les hippopotames aiguisent leurs dents en les frottant les unes contre les autres en permanence.

Les tigres possèdent des dents très solides qui leur permettent de maintenir fermement leurs proies.

Les cobras possèdent des dents creuses et pointues, appelées crochets, qui leur servent à injecter du venin dans leur proie.

La dent des narvals ressemble à une longue corne. On pense qu'elle leur sert à échanger des informations sur l'eau dans laquelle ils se trouvent.

Les dents irrégulières des requins, acérées sur la mâchoire inférieure et pointues sur la mâchoire supérieure, leur permettent de déchiqueter leurs proies.

L'émail des dents des castors contient du fer, ce qui leur donne leur couleur orange et les rend très solides.

Les dents des écureuils poussent en permanence, ce qui est très utile puisqu'ils passent leur temps à ronger.

Le phoque crabier possède des dents dont la forme permet de filtrer le krill dont il se nourrit.

Le poisson-perroquet possède mille dents soudées les unes aux autres en un bec avec lequel il broie le corail.

Le cerf porte-musc est doté de longues canines solides qui le rendent très beau aux yeux des autres cerfs.

Les éléphants utilisent leurs défenses pour creuser le sol, soulever des charges, ramasser de la nourriture, gratter l'écorce des arbres et protéger leur trompe.
